

2026 年深圳市高三年级第二次调研考试

英语参考答案

第二部分 阅读理解

第一节

21-23 ADB 24-27 ADBD 28-31 ACCB 32-35 CABD

第二节

36-40 BGAEF

第三部分 语言运用

第一节

41-45 DBCAC 46-50 CBABC 51-55 DADAB

第二节

56. struck 57. immediately 58. remarkable 59. was introduced 60. combined
61. with 62. What 63. to be shared 64. applause 65. an

第四部分 写作

第一节

Two possible versions:

参考范文一

Hello, everyone! I'm excited to introduce our group project and its final work, The Campus Bird Handbook. 微信公众号IAI English

First, we observed the birds that frequent our campus and took photos of them. Then, we searched for information online to identify each species. The knowledge we gained during the process contributed to the creation of The Campus Bird Handbook, which features ten common bird species. For each species, we provide a vivid picture and information about its living habits. Additionally, some fun facts about them can be found in the handbook.

Birds are an important part of our campus biodiversity. We wish this handbook could spark your interest in our feathered friends.

Thank you for listening! (108 词)

参考范文二

Hello, everyone! On behalf of my group, I'd like to share our project and its final work, The Campus Bird Handbook.

Our project started with daily birdwatching and recording on campus. We also gathered information online and consulted our biology teachers to gain a deeper understanding of each bird species. As weeks passed, our random notes became a structured record—The Campus Bird Handbook. Twelve common bird species, such as swallows and pigeons, are included in the handbook, each illustrated with vivid photos showing their physical features. It also covers detailed descriptions of their living habits and ideal habitats on campus.

We wish this handbook could awaken your love for these feathered friends and deepen your appreciation for campus biodiversity.

Thank you for listening! (117 词)

第二节

One possible version:

It was Alice, who had followed him out of curiosity. She happened to see him leave at night and the bruises on his knees made her worried. “Dad, what are you doing?” she asked. Mark picked up the bike slowly and asked her to sit down with him. Then he told her everything — the summer at seven, the years of excuses, the fear of letting them down. Alice listened quietly. When he finished, he felt a little embarrassed. But Alice just hugged him. “Dad, we don’t care whether you can ride,” she whispered. “We just want you to be with us.” Mark hugged her back, his throat tight. “Okay,” he said softly. “Of course, I’ll be there.” (107词)

That Saturday, when his family went biking, Mark stayed at the campsite happily. He set up the tent, lit the campfire, and started cooking dinner: steak, chicken wings, hot dogs, hot chocolate — everything the kids loved. An hour later, the kids came riding back, tired and hungry. “Daddy! I’m starving!” Bob shouted, grabbing a piece of steak. Alice drank the hot chocolate, leaning against him. “You are the best dad in the world,” she whispered. That night, watching his children sleep soundly, Mark smiled. He couldn’t ride a bike. But he could take good care of the family. And that was enough. (89词) 微信公众号IAI English